Tak Bulo: 125 years of Ukrainian settlement Saturday, September 24, 2016

On September 1891, the first Ukrainians came to Alberta (then the British Northwest) to see for themselves whether the land around Edmonton was fit for settlement. Ivan Pylipiw and Wasyl Eleniak liked what they saw and returned home – today's Ukraine - to tell their fellow peasants what they saw. A few years later, Ukrainians mainly from Galicia and Bukovyna, began to arrive, forming Canada's first Ukrainian settlement in the Edna-Star area (by Lamont). By the time the First World War broke out, over 170,000 had arrived in Canada.

125 years later, Ukrainian-Canadians across Canada celebrate these pioneers, who left everything behind to build a new life in our country. Edmonton's AUUC Branch # 2 will hold a celebration on September 24, 2016; 'Tak Bulo!' (That's the way it was!) named by event organizer Shirley Uhryn, to draw attention to the conditions under which these earliest settlers came, and the hardships they had to endure in order to survive in the new land.

'Tak Bulo!' will celebrate the courage and tenacity of people who left a homeland where life had become intolerable. Many were peasants, attempting to survive on incredibly small acreages, under oppressive Polish and Austrian regimes that imposed taxes with harsh conditions, and ruled over them with contempt.

The earliest Ukrainian immigrants were attracted by promises of free land (Vilni Zemli) offered by a Government that was intent on opening up the West but, unfortunately, was often aided by unscrupulous agents who lured settlers to their new homes with false promises.

Settlers in the new land faced a life that was often no easier than the one they had left, especially during the early years. They found little support or infrastructure, and often faced an unfriendly bureaucracy, employers intent on exploiting cheap labour, and an Anglo-Saxon elite that had little regard for them. They persevered, however, with hard work and mutual support, to pave the way for us.

On September 24, we will honour them at the Ukrainian Centre in Edmonton in a special way – by recounting the conditions under which they came, established homesteads, worked on farms, mines and railways, built homes and communities, and laid the basis for a Ukrainian Canadian culture that has flourished.

The first 'wave' of Ukrainian immigration ended with the outbreak of WWI; there were at least three more 'waves' after that. While Tak Bulo' will celebrate them all, it will draw particular attention to how hard things were for those in the first wave, and will celebrate how far Ukrainian-Canadians have advanced since then. A Ukrainian meal will be followed by a memorable concert featuring a wide variety of stage events all demonstrating the theme, 'Tak Bulo'; i.e. That's how it was! Plan to attend.

'Summer of '86' Anniversary

On Saturday, June 4, 2016, AUUC Branch #2 and the Alberta Labour History Institute co-hosted an event at the Ukrainian Centre to commemorate the 'long hot summer of 1986'. Labour disputes broke out across Alberta that year, as thousands of workers took the streets in reaction to concession demands and roll-backs, as well as restraint measures imposed by the Conservative government of Don Getty.

The strike by UFCW at Edmonton's Gainer's was perhaps best-known, but also affected were: UFCW at Fletchers in Red Deer and Lakeside Packers in Brooks, AUPE at ALCB province-wide, Zeidlers Plywood in Edmonton and Slave Lake and ECWU (now UNIFOR) at Suncor in Ft. McMurray. All these provided lessons that were discussed at the meeting.
